Samsung may restructure display, mobile units
BYLINE: By Kim Yoo-chul
LENGTH: 664 words
Samsung Electronics plans to reduce its mobile and display businesses as the global technology leader is seeking for growth not quantity-focused growth, said people familiar with the issue, last week.
They say the consumer electronics firm plans to seek profits over expansion. They cite Vice Chairman Kwon Oh-hyun's messages who said on the company's anniversary, 'Samsung's TV and mobile businesses are losing luster.'
'There is heated debate for a realignment of Samsung's electronics businesses. Samsung's tech units may be integrated, if necessary, for a leaner structure or to cut costs. But when you think about mobile and display businesses, the company will restructure them,' a source said over the phone.
For smartphones, Samsung's top management reached a consensus not to compete for 'volume growth' as the market has a new order due to the rapid rise of cheaper phones.
'The contribution of Samsung's mobile unit to entire profits will be reduced. As Samsung wants to secure its own business territory, the company will maintain its global share by selling more budget phones and having flexibility in production rates at its local and overseas factories,' he said.
Samsung Electronics was the world's top smartphone maker last year. Its position; however, isn't that strong as it was a few years ago. Its key Vietnam plants are on track to cut production rates to inventories and save costs.
For the third quarter of this year, Samsung's mobile unit reported shipment growth in phones but noted that its 'profitability declined' due to the fire sale pricing incurred to boost sales of its disappointing Galaxy S6, along with a lower handset average selling price (ASP) due to increased sales of mid- to low-end products.
Meanwhile, Samsung is also considering restructuring its display

The screenshot shows the LexisNexis search interface. At the top, there's a red bar with 'LexisNexis Services' and the 'Nexis' logo. Below that are tabs for 'Search', 'Sources', and 'My Alerts & History'. The search results are for 'Samsung' (14 results). A 'Narrow By' section is active, showing several filters: 'Moderate similarity', 'Manufacturing', 'Computer & Electronics Mfg', 'Consumer Electronics Mfg', 'Asia OR Europe OR North America', and 'NOT Patent'. A 'Search Within Results' section is also visible, with 'Include' selected and a search box. The results list on the right shows several items, with a red '3' indicating the number of results for a specific filter.

Samsung may restructure display, mobile units

BYLINE: By Kim Yoo-chul
LENGTH: 664 words

Samsung Electronics plans to reduce its mobile and display businesses as the global technology leader is seeking for growth not quantity-focused growth, said people familiar with the issue, last week.

They say the consumer electronics firm plans to seek profits over expansion. They cite Vice Chairman Kwon Oh-hyun's messages who said on the company's anniversary, 'Samsung's TV and mobile businesses are losing luster.'

'There is heated debate for a realignment of Samsung's electronics businesses. Samsung's tech units may be integrated, if necessary, for a leaner structure or to cut costs. But when you think about mobile and display businesses, the company will restructure them,' a source said over the phone.

For smartphones, Samsung's top management reached a consensus not to compete for 'volume growth' as the market has a new order due to the rapid rise of cheaper phones.

'The contribution of Samsung's mobile unit to entire profits will be reduced. As Samsung wants to secure its own business territory, the company will maintain its global share by selling more budget phones and having flexibility in production rates at its local and overseas factories,' he said.

Samsung Electronics was the world's top smartphone maker last year. Its position; however, isn't that strong as it was a few years ago. Its key Vietnam plants are on track to cut production rates to inventories and save costs.

For the third quarter of this year, Samsung's mobile unit reported shipment growth in phones but noted that its 'profitability declined' due to the fire sale pricing incurred to boost sales of its disappointing Galaxy S6, along with a lower handset average selling price (ASP) due to increased sales of mid- to low-end products.

Meanwhile, Samsung is also considering restructuring its display business to focus more on organic light-emitting diode (OLED) panels rather than LCD ones.

'As Kwon asked for radical change for sustainability, expanding the OLED business will be one option for Samsung Display,' another source said.
